

Thread Trail hires capital resources director

June 28, 2010

The Carolina Thread Trail, also known as The Thread, has hired Lindsey Dunevant as its capital resources director.

The trail will span 15 counties, including Lincoln, and reach more than 2.3 million people in 20 years.

Dunevant will provide key support to the initiative by identifying local, state and federal funding opportunities. Plus, he will focus on attracting dedicated resources for land conservation in the region.

Dunevant will also work closely with elected officials and community leaders to minimize the return on public funding opportunities and will play a critical role facilitating community access to public funds.

Dunevant has served as the director of Albemarle Parks and Recreation for more than 20 years and has been a Stanly County Commissioner since 2006. He has served on the trail's Regional Advisory Council since the project's inception in 2007.

"Lindsey's deep understanding of regional conservation issues and public funding channels make him an invaluable asset to The Thread communities as they seek funding to build trails and establish conservation corridors throughout the region," said Ann Browning, project director for the trail.

"He'll support local trail committees and staff as their 'public funding consultant' and help them secure financial support for local trail segments."

<http://www.lincolntimesnews.com/current.asp?Story=22505&Sect=56&Y=2010&M=6&D=2>